Abstract

James Dunaway wrote about track and field from the late 1940s into the 2010s. His love for the sport grew as he attended Pennsylvania State University, graduating in 1949. He had several track athletes as classmates, including Horace Ashenfelter, Jimmy Gehrdes, Gerry Karver and Curt Stone. They would get tickets for Dunaway for track events at Madison Square Garden in New York City, including the famous Millrose Games. In 1956, while working for an advertising agency in Chicago, Dunaway got the idea to take a leave of absence and report on track and field at the Olympic Games in Melbourne, Australia. He created his own news business, called Hometown Features, to tell the stories of athletes from smaller cities and towns whose newspapers lacked adequate budgets to send reporters to Melbourne. He sent letters to 34 and got the backing of five to help pay his way down under. Dunaway would go on to cover every Olympic Games from 1956 through the 2008 Beijing Games. He wrote a famous instructional book, the Sports Illustrated Book of Track & Field: Running Events, which remained in print for over twenty years. Dunaway was twice elected the President of the Track and Field Writers of America. The United States Track and Field Hall of Fame inducted him on November 6, 2010.

Biographical Note

James Dunaway, though first and foremost an advertising man and later a promotional executive, nevertheless became one of the most eminent track and field journalists of all time. He was born in Houston, Texas on August 17, 1927. In mid-1956, a 28 year-old Dunaway found himself working in the marketing trade at Leo Burnett, a Chicago, Illinois promotions agency. During a yearlong leave of absence, he decided to go to Melbourne, Australia to cover that year's Olympiad, leading to a career that finished with him reporting at every Summer Olympic Games from 1956 through the 2008 Beijing (China) Games, during which he turned 81. Incredibly, Dunaway never had any formal journalistic training, he just learned good grammar from his very scholarly parents. His articles would end up being published in sundry magazines like American Track & Field, Esquire, The Runner, Runner's World, Signature, Sports Illustrated, and Track & Field News, not to mention many other periodicals, and were further featured in newspapers such as the Austin American-Statesman and The New York Times.

Although Dunaway originally hailed from the Lone Star State, he grew up in New Jersey and attended Pennsylvania State University (where he studied Advertising and earned a Bachelor's of Science in Chemistry in 1949). General Electric hired him into their Public Relations Department out of college and he worked there for a year and a half, saving up $1000. He left that job, went to Europe for six months and had only $5.50 to his name when he returned. Dunaway later moved to Chicago to work for the Leo Burnett Agency, before resettling in the New Jersey suburbs of New York City. He later relocated to Austin, Texas in 1995, living there for the remainder of his life. In 2010, Dunaway voiced to (the global track and field organization) the International Association of Athletics Federations (IAAF) that he was, "self-taught as a journalist... 'I learned how to write by working in advertising agencies; I learned how to write about track and field by reading track stories in The New York Times, the New York Herald Tribune, and the New York Sun.'" He proceeded to write about numerous IAAF track meets and in later years often contributed material to the IAAF's website. Dunaway's journalistic accomplishments are legendary, including the following: "In 1960, he began regularly covering track meets in New York (City) for The (New York) Times and Track & Field News (T&FN), becoming (the) Eastern Editor of T&FN (a position he occupied from 1963 until 2004). According to the IAAF, as of 2010, "He (had) covered every (Summer) Olympics (on site) since Melbourne, fourteen in all, as well as every IAAF World Track and Field Championships (which began in 1983) but one, 52 National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA) outdoor championships, and more than 100 total indoor and outdoor Amateur Athletic Union (AAU), The Athletics Congress (TAC), and United States Track and Field (USATF) National Championships."

Dunaway did not describe track and field events to make himself wealthy, he did it as a hobby. He covered the sport because he loved it. In fact, he preferred to pay his own expenses and was content not to lose money on the cost of reporting trips. He self-published (and sold for one dollar in 1967) The Four-Minute Mile, 1954-1967, containing every fact or nuance about the first fourteen years of the four-minute mile (initially achieved by Roger Bannister in 3:59.4 on May 6, 1954 in Oxford, United Kingdom) that any track fan or press officer could ever want to know. Dunaway himself once ran a 5:48 mile, quite an impressive feat in its own right. Dunaway's lengthy service to the passion of bringing the thrilling exploits of track and field athletes to readers earned him various awards and honors. The Track and Field Writers of America (TAFWA) conferred upon Dunaway the Jesse Abramson (named for the former standout track and field reporter for the New York Herald Tribune who reported on or attended every Summer Olympics from the 1928 Amsterdam Games through Montreal in 1976) Award for Outstanding Journalism in 1996. Moreover, TAFWA elected Dunaway their President from 1999-2002 and again from 2005-2007. The United States of America Track and Field (USATF) Hall of Fame inducted him on November 6, 2010. Dunaway summed up his surprise with the following statement: "It's an honor that I really didn't expect. I think, 'Wow, here I am with all of these great athletes', many of whom I know and quite a few are friends of mine, and I'm glad to be sitting in there with them."

Dunaway articulated to USATF during his Hall of Fame Induction interview that he, "grew up in New Jersey reading about the Millrose Games and all those indoor track meets and they sounded very exciting, so I used to hitchhike from State College, Pennsylvania (while he was matriculating at Penn State from 1945-1949), on Saturdays, when they had meets at the Garden (Madison Square Garden in New York City) to New York and I had an aunt and uncle in New York I could stay with. I would go down to the Paramount Hotel where the athletes stayed, and the guys on the team would give me a competitor's ticket so I could get in free and I really enjoyed it." His passion for track and field only grew (over time) because his classmates were track athletes: "A (Delta Upsilon) fraternity brother (of mine)...named Jimmy Gehrdes was a good hurdler, he finished second in the NCAA (Championships) in 1950, and we had a good miler there named Gerry Karver, and Horace Ashenfelter (United States Track and Field Hall of Fame distance runner and gold medalist in the 3000 meter steeplechase at the 1952 Helsinki, Finland, Olympics) was a classmate of mine and Curt Stone, who ended up being on three Olympic teams."

Dunaway further explained to USATF how he made his way to Melbourne to describe track events at the 1956 Olympics: "I was working at Leo Burnett in Chicago and I asked for a leave of absence, and I got this idea of (a news agency he called) Hometown Features (to report on Olympic athletes from smaller cities and towns). So I went to the, whatever he was called, the Executive Director, I guess, of the U.S. Olympic Committee, whose name was Kenneth "Tug" Wilson, and it was in Chicago. I made an appointment and walked over to his office and told him what I'd like to do and he said, 'That's a good idea, we'll do it,' and that's how I got accredited. My father arranged for me, he worked for Texaco, an oil tanker ride to Sumatra (Indonesia), and from there I got on another tanker that took me to Botany Bay in Sydney (Australia), so that's how I got there." He paid part of his way by reporting for his Hometown

Features business on “the Games for five (out of the 34 he wrote to) newspapers (from smaller locales) which had local athletes competing in Melbourne.” He described the ease with which he could move around those Olympics: “I had this metal badge that was shaped like a track and you could go anywhere with that, including the Olympic Village, and everyone stayed in the Village in those days.” Dunaway additionally related that covering an Olympic Games is: “Twenty eighteen-hour days back-to-back and the other six hours includes eating and sleeping. By the beginning of the last week of competition, you're running on empty, just fumes. I guess the adrenalin of it keeps you going, but it's very tiring because from morning till night there's always work to do.”

When queried by USATF in his Hall of Fame Induction interview as to what a good journalist must focus on, Dunaway replied, “The ability to watch something, even if you have some emotional involvement, so if you go to the Olympics and you're an American and people expect you to cheer for the Americans (you should not), and I also liked that line that I heard very early when I got into the Madison Square Garden press box and that was (there is) 'No cheering in the press box.’” Dunaway observed that his advertising work had taught him how to write succinctly, stating, “I never thought I'd ever be a writer until I started writing ads. That's another great discipline for writing because there's no way you can make a 30-second commercial long enough to fit 40 seconds worth of work. You learn to write tight and that's always a good thing.” Moreover, happenstance played a role in the professionalization of Dunaway's track and field journalism: “I had some friends with Sports Illustrated in the (19)60s and I started running with those guys every day in Central Park (in New York City). So when they were looking for someone to write a book about track and field for their Sports Illustrated series (the Sports Illustrated Book of Track and Field: Running Events)...they nominated me, and that made a huge difference in my life because after that lots of athletes knew who I was because they read my book (laughter).” The book became a huge success: “It sold over a couple hundred-thousand copies and it stayed in print for over twenty years. That's a long time for an instructional book to stay in print. That was really the pivot which sort of made me more professional than I was.”

James Dunaway passed away March 15, 2015 in Austin, Texas at the age of 87. He is survived by his son David who also resides in Austin.
