Sydell Herbst and Christopher Gian-Cursio Collection: 3 Boxes, 2 Oversized Boxes, 48 Folders, approx. 700 Items, ca. 1800 – 1984, undated

Abstract

Christopher Gian-Cursio was a naturopathic doctor, nutritionist, author, editor, and researcher. The collection reflects Gian-Cursio's professional career as a practicing Natural Hygienist and his extensive research into the development and pioneers of the health movement in America, especially James Jackson's "Our Home on the Hillside" Hygienic Institute in Dansville, N.Y. Also included in the collection, are a substantial number of clippings on a broad variety of health-related subjects such as food and nutrition, cancer, chiropractic care, fasting, sexual health, a small assortment of newspapers from the middle-to-late 1800s, and correspondence with other leading figures of the Natural Hygiene movement, including Jesse Mercer Gehman and Herbert Shelton. The collection also includes an extensive complement of books, which are listed in the University of Texas Libraries catalog.

Biographical Note

Christopher Gian-Cursio was born in Rochester, New York on February 4, 1910 to Antonio Gian-Cursio and Maria Bianchi. He was an early adopter of and advocate for alternative medicine, naturopathy, and, what he would come to call, Natural Hygiene. In the early 1930s Gian-Cursio attended Dr. Benjamin Lust's American School of Naturopathy, which in 1902 was the first institution to introduce naturopathy to America. His professional career began with the establishment of his orthopathy practice—which holds that prevention and treatment of disease and illness is possible by fasting, dieting, and eschewing nearly all medical treatment and medicines—in Rochester, New York in 1934. On July 11 of that same year, he married Vingenzia “Jenne” Gugino in Batavia, NY, with whom he parented three sons and two daughters.

In 1944 he acquired Warner Castle, a 22-room private residence built on a corner of Highland Park in Rochester, and transformed it into a convalescent home. The following fall, the New York State Department of Education had Dr. Gian-Cursio arrested and prosecuted on a charge of practicing medicine without a license after one of his patients died upon returning home following six weeks of treatment. Although he was acquitted of the charge in May 1946, it would be only the first of at least eight trials that Dr. Gian-Cursio would face throughout his career; he would eventually be imprisoned by the state of Florida. The first acquittal in 1946 also marks the beginning of his long-time activism on behalf of “medical liberty”: the right of Americans to choose treatment according to their beliefs about healing.

In 1952, Dr. Gian-Cursio relocated from Rochester to New York City, but returned each month to Buffalo, Rochester, and Batavia to attend to his remaining patients there. At this time, he took a position as editor of the Journal of Natural Hygiene, and continued to be a prolific author and speaker at conferences and events across the country.

He was estranged from his wife at the end of his life and he lived with his personal assistant until his death on July 26, 1985 in Rochester, NY.

Scope and Content

Sydell Herbst and Christopher Gian-Cursio Collection: 3 Boxes, 2 Oversized Boxes: 48 Folders, approx. 700 Items.

The bulk the collection comprises subject files covering various topics, from both Gian-Cursio's career as a practicing naturopath and natural hygienist, to the substantial amount of research he did on the early history of health reform movements in America. The materials included in the collection include, photocopies of diaries and letters of early health pioneers, photocopies of articles, full newspapers and newspaper clippings, microfilm printouts of newspapers, photocopies of both excerpts and full books, commercially-produced pamphlets, and numerous professional papers and articles written by both Gian-Cursio and others. The materials cover a broad date range, with much of the research material dating from the mid-to-late 1800s, and material related to Gian-Cursio's practice and treatment of patients mostly dating from the mid-to-late 1900s. The collection contains a few photographs, a small assortment of postcards, and an open reel magnetic audiotape.
