Beulah (Boo) Law Collection 1978 - 2016

Abstract

Beulah “Boo” Law (1922-2016) was a student and practitioner of natural hygiene from the early 1980s until her death in 2016. This collection contains materials collected by Law in her practice of natural hygiene. Organizations represented in the collection include Austin-based T.C. Fry’s Life Science Institute, various health retreats, and natural health organizations such as Victoria Bidwell’s Get Well ★ Stay Well, America! and the National Health Association (formerly the American Natural Hygiene Society). The materials document education and social communities focused on natural hygiene throughout the late twentieth and early twenty-first centuries.

BIOGRAPHICAL INFORMATION

Beulah “Boo” Enfield Law was born on September 15, 1922 in Arthur County, Nebraska to John H. and Minnie Jorgensen Enfield. Law was raised on “L♥” Ranch alongside four older brothers and a younger sister. While in high school, Law earned a teaching certificate at the Nebraska School of Agriculture. From 1941-1943, she was a schoolteacher in various rural communities in western Nebraska.¹ In 1943, Law left Nebraska for California, where she built B-17 bombers at a Lockheed factory in Burbank in support of the United States’ efforts in World War II.

After studying pre-nursing at Glendale College, Law received a degree in nursing from Los Angeles County General Hospital School of Nursing in 1945.² Law was a nurse for the rest of her professional career, practicing at Los Angeles County General Hospital, the National Institutes of Health and Holton Arms School, Trinity College and the Department of Labor, Johns Hopkins Hospital, and the Army Distaff Hall (Knollwood Military Retirement Residence), where she worked for twenty-five years.³

In the 1960s, Law became interested in holistic health after coming across informational materials on natural hygiene from Texan natural health practitioner and educator T.C. Fry.⁴ As a healthcare worker whose own family members faced a number of physical and mental illnesses, Law was intrigued by the natural hygiene movement, which combines naturopathic healing methods with the idea that one’s own thoughts have an influence on his or her physical health.⁵ In 1985 she and her daughter Jeanne became members of the American National Hygiene Society (now the National Health Association), which promotes holistic health through vegetarianism, prescribed patterns of activity and sleep, and occasional fasting.⁶

From 1983-1991, Law took the Life Science Health System Nutritional Science correspondence course through T.C. Fry’s Life Science Institute, a school that offered non-accredited formal training in the natural hygiene movement. Fry advertised that upon completion of the course students would be awarded a PhD, a distinction Law adopted. Through the course, Law connected with individuals and institutions involved in the hygiene movement, including Life

Science test grader Victoria Bidwell (of Get Well ★ Stay Well, America!) and Ralph Cinque (health retreat proprietor). Although legal troubles on the part of T.C. Fry ultimately caused the Life Science Institute to close, and its final materials distributed by Victoria Bidwell, Law remained connected with the network for years.

Law pursued further connections in the natural hygiene movement by attending conferences—including the American Natural Hygiene Society's Natural Living Conference, the National Health Association's Healthy Living Conference, and the North American Vegetarian Society's Vegetarian Summerfest—and a number of fasting retreats, including Dr. Ralph Cinque's Health Retreat and the Royl Retreat.

Law was married for 43 years to Melvin Law,⁷ with whom she had three children: John Law, Mona Law Pedersen, and Jeanne Hale. Law died on December 5, 2016 in Bethesda, Maryland.⁸

SCOPE AND CONTENT NOTE

This collection contains materials created and collected by natural hygiene student and practitioner Beulah “Boo” Law, spanning 1978-2016. Materials include correspondence, journals, publications, pamphlets, newspaper clippings, lesson plans, tests and answer sheets, conference agendas, travel plans, and budget information.

Lessons and accompanying exams from the Life Science Health System course document Law’s education through T.C. Fry’s Life Science Institute (originally called the College of Life Science and then briefly the American College of Health Science). The twenty parts of the Nutritional Science course, each comprised of multiple lessons, depict the human body through the lens of natural hygiene and provide information about how the principles of natural health have been taught formally. Correspondence documents the administrative proceedings of the Institute during and subsequent to Law's time as a student.

Also included in the collection are materials from Victoria Bidwell’s natural health organization, Get Well ★ Stay Well, America!. Bidwell’s “Common Health Sense” newsletters promote natural hygiene values with a unique American patriotism. Other organizations are represented through conference materials from Law’s attendance at health and wellness conferences. Such organizations include the National Health Association (formerly American Natural Hygiene Society) and the North American Vegetarian Society. Additionally, Law’s membership materials from the DC-MD-VA (DC-Maryland-Virginia) Natural Hygienists document the activities and beliefs of the local natural hygiene organization.

Materials from health retreats and water fasting centers document Law’s visits to Dr. Ralph Cinque's Health Retreat and the Roysl Retreat, as well as informational packets on the Lakemont Health Resort and the Center for Chiropractic and Conservative Therapy. Details about the operation and experience of water fasting at these natural hygiene retreats are found in correspondence between Law and the proprietors of these retreats, and in Law’s written accounts documenting water fasts undertaken at Dr. Ralph Cinque's Health Retreat and the Roysl Retreat.

Numerous published materials, including magazines and pamphlets on health and wellness, demonstrate how discourses on matters pertinent to the natural hygiene community changed through time. The collection also contains some personal materials, including correspondence and a journal, which provide autobiographical and contextual information to Law’s practice of natural hygiene.
